Summer School @ Harvard Library: Instructors

Our doors may be closed, but Harvard Library is open! Librarians are here to support your instruction, class assignments, and your research through the many online resources available to you, ranging from digitized manuscripts and ancient maps, to e-books, data visualization and digital storytelling. For updates on library resources during COVID-19, please visit: http://library.harvard.edu

This online guide includes information about course reserves and other library resources to assist Summer School instructors: http://guides.library.harvard.edu/summerfaculty

Find out how Harvard Library supports your instruction and research remotely:

- https://library.harvard.edu/how-to/teach-remotely-harvard-library
- https://library.harvard.edu/how-to/get-remote-support-research-publishing

Let us create an online guide specifically tailored for your course and assignments. You might also be interested in exploring the many existing subject-specific guides:

http://guides.library.harvard.edu

After following this link, click on the “Guides by Subject” link.

Subject specialists are happy to support your course in many ways: helping you and your students navigate digital access to your course materials; collaborating on assignment design to support student success; providing small group and individual consultations for your students.

We are happy to join your online class for library instruction. To get in touch with a librarian in your subject area, please contact Mikel Burt: mikelburt@fas.harvard.edu Consider adding a subject librarian to your Canvas course! This enables us to add library modules directly to your course, link to online subject guides, and be directly accessible to you and your students.

For questions about the Canvas course librarian role, please email Emily Coolidge Toker: etoker@g.harvard.edu